

Social Issues in Management and Business Ethics: Exercises and Activities

Exercise/Activity Title:

Aristotle Happiness Survey

Exercise/Activity Explanation (150 words or less):

Aristotle maintained that happiness is a function of four factors: health, wealth, intellectual virtue and moral virtue. Students assess their happiness, and happiness within their organization, using an Aristotle Happiness Survey. Students highlight strengths, weaknesses, and a continuous improvement recommendation that addresses a weakness.

The Purpose of Life

Aristotle reasoned that happiness is a function of four factors:

- 1) Health – For the most part, healthy people are happier than sick people: Are you in good health?
- 2) Wealth – For the most part, wealthy people are happier than poor people: Are you earning an adequate salary?
- 3) Intellectual Virtue – For the most part, educated people are happier than uneducated people: Are you continually learning new things?
- 4) Moral Virtue – For the most part, moral people are happier than immoral people: Are you continually doing good deeds?
